

"CRADLE MURDERER" TODAY WILL CONTINUE RETRACING OF THE DEATH ROUTE OVER WHICH SHE TRAVELED WITH BODIES OF HER VICTIMS

By David P. Sentner
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 12.—Gladys Parks Baker, alleged "cradle murderer" today was to continue her retracing of the death route over which she traveled several months ago with the bodies of five-year-old Dorothy Rogers and her two-year-old brother, Timmie.

The Janesque, auburn-haired woman—the "iron woman" as detectives call her—was to be led to her former homes in Camden. She will be asked to re-enact the deaths of the two children to whom she was supposed to play substitute mother.

Authorities will ask her to show:

How she slapped Dorothy to death.

How little Timmie fell down the stairs to his death as the prisoner claims.

How she hid the bodies.

How she later smuggled them out of the house in suitcases.

The medical report on file today revealed that the baby, Timothy, received a fracture of the jawbone and a fracture at the base of the skull, the latter causing his death.

The fractures might have been caused by falling downstairs," said Dr. Isaac Leonard, county physician. "However, they looked more like blows with a heavy, blunt instrument."

Allen Rogers, insurance agent of Woodbury, N. J., father of the dead babies, today said he was convinced that Mrs. Baker killed both Dorothy and Timothy. The prisoner is a cousin of Rogers' dead wife.

"I think she must have been insane," said Rogers.

Prosecutor Clifford Baldwin, in constructing a motive for the alleged slaying, said he believed Mrs. Baker was angry at Rogers for tracing her movements to find the children. In addition, Baldwin said, the children had outlived their usefulness in the blackmailing scheme which Mrs. Baker conducted and that she murdered them rather than return them to their father.

Six men from Atlantic City and Philadelphia and one man from St. Louis, have informed police of blackmail attempts by Mrs. Baker who told them they were the father of the children, some admitted paying her money.

"She got enough money so that she, in her own words, hasn't worked for several years," said Prosecutor Baldwin.

The fact that other children appeared to have been used in the blackmail scheme caused authorities to ask police of other cities to check up their lists of missing children.

Feeling against the alleged baby killer is running so high among women in this vicinity that the trip with the prisoner today will be made secretly.

When Mrs. Baker was taken to the furtive graves she dug for the two children at Absecon and National Park, large and threatening crowds followed. At National Park where she disposed of the body of Dorothy a mob of 500 women tried to attack her.

Police questioned Mrs. Baker until a late hour last night but failed to shake her from her first recital of the case.

PLANE TALK

By HARRY A. SUTTON
Of the Technical Staff,
The Aviation Corporation
(Written Expressly for International News Service)

12. The Take-off

Ready for the air, the pilot pauses a minute or two at the end of the runway to look around and make certain that the air above and field before him are clear of other machines. Then, centering ailerons and rudder and lowering the elevator, he gradually opens the throttle. As the engine revs up, the plane will move forward, slowly at first, but with rapidly gathering speed.

Before many feet have been covered, the lower elevator will raise the light tail, leveling the machine. In this position, tail up and wheels racing over the ground, it gradually accelerates until flying speed is attained.

Gently, the pilot eases the stick backward, raising the elevator, lowering the tail and lifting the nose until the spinning wheels leave the earth. Thus directly into the wind he mounts until a safe altitude for altering the plane's direction, between 500 and 1,000 feet, is reached.

It is well before starting to aim the nose at some distant ground object so that the take-off run may be straight and true into the wind.

Caution should be exercised not to allow the tail to rise too high nor the plane at first to climb too fast. One may cause nosing over before the machine takes the air while the latter will cause loss of flying speed (stalling) and a sudden drop of the nose.

(Tomorrow's article of Plane Talk will discuss straight and level flight.)

"JIMMIE" DYKES WILL SPEAK TO FATHERS' ASS'N

Third Baseman of "A's" Will Speak About the Great American Game

REMINISCENCES OF GAME

Expect Many Baseball Fans At H. S. Auditorium On Thursday Night

The executive committee of the Fathers' Association, has prepared an excellent program for the regular monthly meeting, to be held on Thursday evening, November 14th. Knowing the interest which all true sportsmen have in America's national game, baseball, and particularly the pride which Bristol fans felt over the success of the Philadelphia Athletics' baseball team, in winning the world's series, it has been decided to obtain a speaker for this coming meeting, who is qualified to talk upon the subject of baseball, which is acknowledged by all, to be the greatest American sport.

The committee is exceedingly pleased to announce that they have succeeded in obtaining "Jimmie" Dykes, the well-known third baseman of the Athletics, who will recount reminiscences of his baseball career, and tell about the recent world's series games, from the standpoint of a player.

No one who understands the game better, or who is more qualified to speak upon the subject of baseball, could have been secured than "Jimmie" Dykes, as he is known to all baseball fans. "Jimmie" is a Philadelphia boy, having been born in the Quaker City, November 16, 1896. He is 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighs 180 pounds. He is a right-handed batter and also throws with his right hand. His baseball career began with the Athletics in 1917, when he was 21 years old. The same year he was transferred to the Gettysburg club, and played in the Blue Ridge League. In 1918 he was back with the Athletics, but at the beginning of 1919 he played in the Southern League, as a member of the Atlanta, Ga., baseball club. The same season he was transferred to the Athletics and has remained with them ever since. His regular position is third base, but he is equally qualified to hold down the positions of second base or shortstop. This versatility makes him a valuable asset to Connie Mack.

Now that his services have been secured to address the Fathers' Association, it is hoped that a large crowd will be in attendance. Every member of the Association should feel it his duty to be present, and try to bring someone else with him, so that the speaker may be greeted by a large crowd.

The meeting on Thursday evening will be held in the High School Auditorium, corner of Wilson avenue and Garfield street, at 8 o'clock. At the conclusion, a hot lunch will be served in the cafeteria.

Everybody is invited whether a member or not.

IDENTIFY BODY OF MAN FOUND IN NESHAMINY

Karl J. Hagenlocker, 25, of Philadelphia, Believed To Be A Suicide

BROODED OVER HEALTH

The body of the young man found floating in the Neshaminy Creek late Saturday afternoon, has been identified as that of Karl J. Hagenlocker, 25, of 2931 Delphi street, Philadelphia.

The young man, who had been dependent over the condition of his health, and brooding over the thoughts of a third operation, is believed to have committed suicide.

Young Hagenlocker resided with his brother at the Delphi street address. Born in Germany he had come to the United States ten years ago. Two operations were performed here and following a visit to his home-land his health improved. He again returned to this country, and his health again waned. Recently he was informed by physicians that a third operation would be necessary. Medical men stated they did not believe he would survive the operation. It is thought that Hagenlocker worried over his condition.

Identification of the body was made by the victim's brother, who came here from Philadelphia. The body will be forwarded to Philadelphia today for burial.

Young Hagenlocker is also survived by his mother who lives in Germany, and an uncle who makes his home in this country.

The body was found floating in the creek late Saturday afternoon by Wilfred Peters and Harold Leary, of Cornwells Heights, who were then returning from a gunning trip. The body was brought to the morgue of the H. S. Rue Estate, here, where identification was made today. It is believed the body had been in the water three or four days.

ELECTION JUDGE IN THIRD WARD HELD FOR COURT

Edward B. Stetson Must Stand Trial on Charges of John R. Watson

KNIGHT CASE DISMISSED

Large Crowd Attends Hearing Held in Municipal Building

Edward B. Stetson, judge of elections, Third Ward, after being given a further hearing last night upon the charges growing out of refusing to permit two residents of that ward to vote on November 5th, at the General Election, was discharged on one of the charges and held in $1,000 for court on the charges preferred by the second of his two prosecutors.

Stetson was taken into custody late Thursday evening on charges lodged by John R. Watson, 595 Bath street; and Thomas J. Knight, Hotel Closson, Bath & Otter streets. Both men lodged the same charges against Stetson.

The charges were:

"Willfully, unlawfully and illegally refusing to permit a lawful entitled elector of the district to vote.

"Willfully, unlawfully and illegally refusing to permit a qualified elector to receive a party ballot.

"Willfully, unlawfully, and illegally refusing to allow a qualified elector to take affidavit as to his residence.

"Willfully, unlawfully and illegally neglecting to do his duty as a judge of election.

Stetson was represented by E. Louis Rubin and both of the prosecutors had J. Leslie Kilcoyne as their attorney.

The hearing room in the municipal building was crowded and both factions to the controversy were well represented.

James Guy, Justice of Peace, was the sitting justice.

The first witness to take the stand was John R. Watson. He gave his age as being over 21 years and stated that he resided at 595 Bath street, Third Ward, Bristol Borough. He said that he had lived there for the past 35 years. He testified he had never voted anywhere else but in the Third Ward and that he had always paid his taxes in that ward.

Mr. Watson described how he visited the polling place of the Third Ward at about 7:15 on the morning of November 5th and was accompanied by his wife. He said that he asked for a ballot and was refused by Antoni Terneson, minority inspector, on the grounds that he was not a resident of the Ward.

"I asked for an affidavit," said the witness.

"I was told that I couldn't have it," Stetson as judge sustained the action of the minority inspector in refusing Watson a ballot, according to the witness. John Simons, majority inspector, was willing that Watson should take the affidavit, certifying as to his place of residence.

But Stetson refused Watson the affidavit the second time.

Watson testified that he and his family had moved part of their furniture to North Radcliffe street address but that he had never changed his legal residence. He said that he had never abandoned 595 Bath street as his legal voting residence. He stated that he had moved back to 595 Bath street from North Radcliffe street about three weeks ago.

Mrs. John R. Watson, wife of the prosecutor, was called and substantiated the testimony of her husband.

Thomas J. Knight, the other prosecutor in the case, was called and testified that he had lived at the Hotel Closson, Third Ward, since April 1st and had never been away from the place for a period longer than from eight to 12 hours.

He told how he visited the Third Ward polling place on November 5th at about eight o'clock. He was refused a ballot by Terneson, majority inspector and Terneson was sustained by Stetson. Simons, majority inspector, was willing that Knight should take an affidavit certifying as to his place of residence.

Knight told Justice Guy that Joseph B. Keating, watcher, asked for an affidavit for him (Knight) and that it was refused. Knight said that he, personally, did not ask for the affidavit.

Mr. Rubin, as attorney for Stetson, asked that his client be discharged on the Knight case on the grounds that the prosecutor had not asked for the affidavit himself and consequently had not been refused one.

Justice Guy held Stetson in $1,000 bail on the charges lodged by Watson but discharged him on the allegations of Knight.

The case will now go to Court for trial with Watson as the prosecutor. It was rumored after the hearing that action will be taken by Knight to get his case before the Court.

SEALS OF HEALTH

So much accustomed to the annual sale of Tuberculosis Christmas seals has the nation become that few persons fully realize what these familiar little emblems represent in the way of results vital to every American, old and young, rich and poor. Therefore, though many people buy them every year—very often, perhaps, with the feeling that they are doing a generous and beautiful thing as a concession to the spirit of the season—a great many need to be reminded of the noble and important work these little tokens are doing every day and every month in the calendar.

People are shocked and alarmed by reports of the increasing death rate from motor accidents. One case of smallpox can make a whole community panicky. But few are alarmed by the word "tuberculosis." Yet that is the name of what is still the leading cause of death between the ages of 15 and 35.

Physicians and health authorities have learned that it is one of the hardest of human foes to master. It is an insidious plague that lies in wait alike at noonday and in the darkness. Nobody is immune from it, no class or age may defy it.

Happily by organized effort and scientific study we are getting the upper hand of this scourge—slowly, it is true, but surely. We have found out how to balk it, how to reduce its ravages, how to rescue those in the earlier stages, how to throw barricades of prevention around those upon whom it threatens to fix itself.

And the little Christmas seals with the Red Cross are the shells which help to drive off tuberculosis in the constant warfare which has to be waged against it. Buyers of these seals of mercy are giving life to the dying, health to the sick and protection to all mankind, including themselves.

NECESSARY MATERIALISM

Charles M. Schwab, Pollyanna of American business, the consummate optimist, was heard on a theme new to him when he dedicated a $250,000 science laboratory at a Pennsylvania college. Instead of talking on prosperity, steel orders and the future of American business he took as his text the criticism of America that it is materialistic to a fault. The steel manufacturer feels this way about it:

"It is impossible for me to agree with certain foreign critics that the United States is materialistic and has no interest in the humanitarian and gracious phases of existence. When we consider the hundreds of millions of dollars given by American business men to the advancement of human welfare, through the establishment of scientific laboratories and other research efforts, we can only come to the conclusion that we, as a people, express ourselves most adequately in those fields which tend directly to make life in its largest sense more livable."

Those "certain foreign critics" would rank Schwab among the despised materialists, they might even crown him their king and ruler, but he has shown them that what they in their blindness, have seen as the purpose of all things American is merely a means to a far more noble end. If the people of the United States are materialistic, it is materialism of action rather than of thought and purpose.

CHAPTER X—Continued

While Ann Collins was doing her solo number, Eleanor, leading a Russian wolfhound on a leash, sauntered in, with Topsy lagging some paces behind.

"Do come on, old thing," she called to Topsy. "We're atrociously late, you know."

It cannot be said that Topsy walked in. She manipulated her two legs like crutches, moving one leg painfully after the other, as though she were about to fall apart. "I'm collapsing," she wailed, "and you tell me to hurry."

"I'm afraid you won't be able to 'set' and concentrate for a while."

"I hope this rehearsal hasn't interfered with any social engagements," Eleanor laughed.

"You'll have to do it standing up," Eleanor laughed.

Topsy stopped to rest, her face plainly contorted with pain.

"Oh," she moaned. "I hope that horse feels as bad as I do. Don't you know that I can't possibly keep up with you? Run ahead, and I'll meet you in the dressing room."

"You're making such a fuss about it. After the first time one rides, one must expect to feel somewhat done in."

"Jerry," complained Topsy, stopping for sympathy on her way to the stage, "I'm sick. Just sick."

"You'll be more sick if you don't hurry and get ready. George has been asking for you girls—and he's mad as blazes."

"But I'm sick, Jerry. That horse—what he did to me!"

"I was just telling her she should expect to feel done in for a while, shouldn't she?" asked Eleanor.

"Done in!" exclaimed Topsy. "Say, listen. My whole interior decoration is ruined. Every time I'd go up in the air, I'd pray, 'Oh, Lord, this time let me land just a half an inch to the side of the one I've been hitting for the last half hour!' The horse went down and I went up, and when the horse went up, I went down. We just couldn't get synchronized."

"Horseback riding is the sport of kings. Really, there's nothing to equal it for reducing—" said Eleanor with a superior air.

"Reducing the horse, you mean," parried Topsy. "You should have seen the nasty look he gave me when I climbed down off him."

"It wasn't a gentleman, Topsy. She was a lady."

"All I got to say is," Topsy said with finality, "one lady shouldn't ought to do such a thing to another."

"If I remember correctly, her name was Pearl."

"It ought to be Granite," Eleanor consulted her watch and decided that they were "jolly late" for rehearsal.

"Come, Sergey Ivanitch," she called to the dog, as she started for the dressing room.

"Hey, wait for baby!" Topsy demanded weakly, dragging herself slowly behind Eleanor.

By this time the dance director had rehearsed Ann Collins and the girls a number of times.

"That was a lot better," he said at last. "You kids stick around. We'll try this number again later."

The girls slipped on coats over their rehearsal costumes, and made themselves comfortable around the stage. Ann Collins stopped to talk to the dance director.

"Larry, I feel rotten," she complained. "I'm going to quit."

"Wait till we run through it once more. It won't be much. We've just got to get that right."

"Come on now and be a sport. Just a few minutes more and you'll be through anyway. Don't fall down on the job when we need you."

Ann mumbled something about the ingratitude of some people, and putting on her coat, sat down to wait for her number to be called again.

Violet had joined Jerry and Wally in the audience, and now the three of them sat there steeped in gloom. They had already talked the situation over once more, and Jerry, still leading the trio, had come to one conclusion.

"So you really think Wally and I had better go see Uncle Steve?" Violet asked for the second time. "It's the only thing left to do," Jerry assured her.

Wally agreed that it was. "I was thinking of that myself while you were doing that number," he told Vi.

"I've made a mess of everything," Jerry wailed. "Oh, I did want to help you two youngsters, but I've just spoiled the beans."

"No, you haven't, Jerry," the two said in chorus.

"Mr. Lee will hate show girls more than ever now. But he's seen enough of Vi to know that she's all right. We've accomplished that much anyhow. Your only chance is to go to him with Vi—and throw yourself on his mercy."

"I'm afraid they'll land pretty hard," put in Mabel who had joined them in time to hear Jerry's advice.

"Lo, Mabel," Jerry greeted her. "Hi, kids. Gee, there's enough gloom among you three to supply all the undertaking parlors in town."

"And have enough left over to make a Russian novel," added Wally.

"My poor Rover isn't himself today," Mabel said, inspecting the Pekinese in her arms. "He seems terribly down-hearted, and I can't find out why."

"Come on, Wally," urged Violet. "Let's go see your uncle and have it over with."

"All right, and I hope we're not wasting our time," Wally replied. "The two of them took leave of Jerry and Mabel, and Mabel seated herself next to Jerry."

"Poor Rover's nerves seem to be in awful shape," Mabel continued. "He's certainly got distemper—or maybe suppressed desires."

Outside their dressing rooms, Eleanor and Topsy were discussing the merits of Eleanor's dog.

"An aristocrat to his finger tips," Eleanor remarked. "Dear Sergey Ivanitch—how he enjoys cavort!"

"What a break!" Topsy said. "Imagine having a waist line like his, and he don't even need to diet to keep it."

They were interrupted by the approach of a hostile stage manager.

"I hope this rehearsal hasn't interfered with any social engagements, you ladies might have had," he said ironically.

"Ah me! We realize we're late, old fellow. Be a good egg, George, and don't reprimand us," coaxed Eleanor.

"Show up late for rehearsal once more, and both of you are all 'ashed up with this troupe. Now get dressed, quick!"

Topsy looked at Eleanor for encouragement and then turned to the stage manager.

"I can't do no rehearsing today," she said.

"That wasn't included in your contract, eh?"

"Don't get sarcastical," Topsy demanded. "I'm a very sick woman. I've got a very sore—" She hesitated, looking to Eleanor for help.

"Sore what?" the stage manager demanded.

"Tell him the truth, darling," Eleanor advised. "One can't shock him. He's been married frequently."

"Well, I had an accident," Topsy told him at last. "I was horseback riding. Oh, use your imagination."

"Quit stalling! Get dressed and down on that stage before I tell you what I really think of you."

He turned away from them disgustedly, and the girls knew he had meant what he said.

"Hibred lout!" Eleanor mumbled under her breath. "Come, Sergey Ivanitch."

She went into the dressing room, followed by a much sadder and much wiser Topsy.

"They wrote the part of Simon Legree special for that pigeon!" she said with resignation.

CHAPTER XI

In the audience Jerry and Mabel were discussing the events of the night before again.

"Are you lucky?" Mabel exclaimed. "I have to knock them in the head or drug 'em—and then they escape."

But Jerry did not look at it from that point of view.

"Oh, Mabel, I was so ashamed of what I'd done to him—sorry and yet glad, I mean, glad to find out that he really cared for me."

(To be continued.)

Millions of Safety Symbols

Each year more than 120,000,000 labels of the Underwriters' Laboratories are attached to various articles, devices and materials used by the American people.

Many of your housekeeping utilities—much of the equipment which serves in the homes, stores, factories, offices, schools, theatres and other public buildings—bear the well-known Symbol of Safety—the label of Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc.—because they have earned that right through severe test and inspection.

Manufacturers Co-operate

In co-operation with many thousands of manufacturers, the Underwriters' Laboratories scientifically establish and safeguard the fire and accident hazards of many thousands of different devices and materials.

In 1928 this work involved nearly 60,000 inspections in 63 cities, hundreds of re-examinations, and approximately 4,800 laboratory tests and examinations by the more than 400 engineers and especially trained employees.

A Public Service

Underwriters' Laboratories, incorporated in 1901, was established and is maintained by The National Board of Fire Underwriters. It is now the largest privately owned testing laboratories devoted to the conservation of life and property.

The principal testing station is in Chicago. It is an exceedingly interesting place to visit. Scientists and engineers from all over the world go there to see the work and examine the methods used. The public is always welcome.

By thus safeguarding life and property the Stock Fire Insurance companies make one of their most substantial contributions to the public welfare.

12-Year-Old Lad Saves Life of Younger Boy

Last Friday evening a five-year-old boy, whose identity is not known, but who is said to reside on New Buckle street, while playing on the Washington street bridge, lost his balance and fell in the water.

Benjamin Harmon, of Jefferson avenue, twelve-year-old boy, and a member of the fifth grade of Jefferson avenue school, who was fishing nearby, hearing the splash, ran towards the bridge, throwing off his clothing as he ran, with the intention of jumping in the water to save the boy. As he looked in the water he saw the boy appearing above the surface, and realizing that he was close enough to be reached from the bridge, young Harmon quickly threw himself down and grasping the iron support, reached over and caught the boy, pulling him to safety.

The little lad scampered off with apparently no bad results from his narrow escape.

Tuning in on the Talkies by Walcott

IN the limited space allotted to Ann Pennington herewith she cannot dance as she will to the music of Ted Lewis' jazz orchestra in "Is Everybody Happy?"

"The Antics of Ann" would require at least a full page.

"Murder Will Out" On the Screen.—Headline.

And that's one of the few pieces.

Radio, television and talking movies are explained in a new science course for New York City school boys.

Providing, also a dandy excuse for the lady to sit before the screen.

"Love Is a Lie" and there is a photoplay title to prove it.

Warner Bros. offer Pauline Frederick in "Evidence" and mark the exhibit for identification as a Vitaphone talking picture.

Dolores Costello expertly opines: "You won't see short skirts much longer."

"The Million Dollar Collar" is dedicated to "The Sap" who marries for money and earns it.

"Even As You and I" Sophie Tucker declares in the dialog of "Honky Tonk."

"I'm a sizzling spud in public, but I'm just a cold potato at home."

"The Terror" is a title appropriate to those chivvy electric signs.

For "Double Feature" Day "The One Woman Idea." "Get Your Man"

Georges Carpentier, in "Show of Shows," hopes to pass along to the screen the knock-out he collected from Jack Dempsey.

"Page the Prince" Has Very Interesting Plot

The delightful musical show, "Page the Prince," which comes to the high school auditorium on the evenings of Thursday and Friday, November 21 and 22, and sponsored by the high school, is bound to be labelled one of the real hits of the season. It is a farce-comedy, set to music—tells a story that scintillates with brilliant comedy and wit.

Besides a theme of real heart interest, there is a thrilling romance involved, for the story deals with the Princess Otilie of Gondolivia on the Rhine, who, with her brother, Prince Edward, sojourns in America just long enough to enslave the hearts of several young Americans who, in turn, undergo trials and tribulations for their loved ones before everything is smoothed out in true musical-comedy fashion. The scene in act one is laid in a New York cafe, and in act two in Gondolivia, a mythical little principality on the Rhine.

Needless to say, this makes for considerable diversity in the way of costumes and stage settings, and the producers of the piece have spared nothing to realize this opportunity.

Miss Boyer, the directress, advises that the rehearsals are progressing with a bang, and everyone is enthused over the show.

WILL ARREST DRIVERS OF UNAPPROVED CARS

All Machines on Road After Friday Must Have Stickers

GIVE FINAL WARNING

HARRISBURG, Nov. 11.—Captain Wilson C. Price, superintendent of the State Highway Patrol, has issued orders to the several hundred members of the patrol, directing the arrest November 16 of all persons operating motor cars which do not bear the "approved, inspected" windshield sticker.

"Since late in the summer owners and drivers of motor vehicles have been hearing about this inspection campaign," said Motor Vehicle Commissioner Benjamin G. Eynon. "Official inspection stations have been in operation since October 1. The period in which inspection is to be made will end November 15. After that date an uninspected, unapproved car or truck will operate illegally, if it operates at all; therefore the patrol has been directed to arrest violators of the law." Up to Monday of this week approx-mately 1,400,000 cars and trucks had been examined and approved, reports show. The owners of 400,000 others had shown no inclination to obey the law enacted by the 1929 Legislature. This law provides that a car unapproved November 15 cannot legally be operated in Pennsylvania between November 15 and December 15.

Motor patrolmen at all examining stations in Pennsylvania have been directed to refuse to examine applicants for drivers' licenses who present themselves in uninspected cars. "I see no reason why patrol officers should endanger their lives in cars not mechanically fit—and a car not inspected and approved may be mechanically unfit," said Captain Wilson C. Price. "Whether it is or not, we examine no applicants appearing in unapproved cars."

Of the cars so far examined by the official stations, approximately 2,000 have been refused an "approved" stick, their condition mechanically being terrible, and their drivers refusing to have the work done on brakes or lamps which would have placed them in good condition. Owners of these cars within a day or so will receive a communication from the Bureau of Motor Vehicles, directing that within a certain named period they have their cars inspected, or run the risk of having their licenses revoked.

There will be no extension of time

ERIE YOUNGSTER BENEFITTED BY FAMED KONJOLA

Happy Mother Tells How Advanced Medicine Ended Ailments of Her Five-Year-Old Son

MASTER "BILLY" WILSON

"I was terribly worried about my son, who is only five years old," said Mrs. Charles Wilson, 914 East Eleventh street, Erie, Penna. "For two years he had been in a sickly condition—ailing all the time. He was weak and anemic; had no appetite and was constipated to a chronic degree. Daily he got worse and finally was but a shadow of what a five-year old boy should be."

"Billy responded to the Konjola treatment right from the start. It cleansed and strengthened his system. New strength and energy flowed through Billy's system. His appetite increased and his bowels became regular as clockwork. I find it hard to praise Konjola enough for it made our home one of happiness."

Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cut Rate store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)
